Ne, a Particle or Adjunct of great use, grace and ornament in the Italian tongue, the true use whereof I could yet never find set down, nor methodically described by any, which I find to have these ensuing significations.
First, Nè, is sometimes an Adverb of distinction, or (as some count it) of denial or refusal, and then it is commonly without a verb, and in the beginning of sentences, signifying in English, Nor, or Neither, and then should it be accented, as in these examples, Nè ti sóno amíco, nè ánco lo vóglio éssere pérche, nè tù lo meríti, nè si conviéne, I am not thy friend, nor will I be, because thou neither deserv'st it, nor is it fiting: or otherwise, Nè quésto, nè quéllo ti concédo, impe-rochè, nè mi ámi, nè mi puói vedére, I'll grant thee neither this nor that, because thou neither lovest, nor canst endure to see me.
Ne, is secondly, often an Adverb or Preposition local, or of place, but then must the Article I, be understood or implied, whether it be Apostrophated or no, signifying in, or in the, or with; as for example, Spassegiándo nè cámpi, m'incontrai nè miéi amíci, walking in the fields, I met with my friends; or else Ne' libri si léggono mólte cóse, in books many things are red: ne' savii si tróvano i buóni consiglii une' vítii si pérdono mólti, &c. in wise men are good counsels to be had, and in vices many miscarry.
Ne, thirdly, being joyned (as often it is) with any of these transitory verbs, or of motion, Andáre, Fuggíre, or else Veníre, whether before or after, it serveth for an Adverb meerly local or of place, signifying, hence, thence, or away; as for example, Io me ne vádo a spásso, I go my ways hence abroad; voléndosene égli andáre, lúi se ne è fuggíto, he being about to be gone hence, he is fled hence; Io me ne vénni vía, I came my ways hence.
Ne, fourthly, doth most often and commonly serve and stand in place of an Adverb of quantity, signifying in English, some, some of it, thereof, of it, of them, part of any, none, not any, none of it, having ever relation, or reference to the chief sub. mentioned, spoken of, or meant in the sentence, as reciprocal unto it, and is most elegantly so often used, to avoid iteration of the said principal Noun-substantive; as for example, Signór mío voi mi domandáte denári (remember that Denári is the chief Noun spoken of) Io non ne hò, se ne havéssi, ve ne faréi párte, quándo ne havero, voi ne potréte dispórre, mi dispiáce non havérne, vísto che tánti áltri ne hánno, che non ne sóno dégni: Denári, is here mentioned but once, yet hath Ne eight times reference unto Denári: the English is, Sir, you demand money of me, I have none, had I any, I would impart some unto you; when I shall have any, you shall dispose thereof; I am sorry I have none, seeing so many others to have some that are not worthy of it, or of them.
Ne, fifthly, serveth often for the Pronoun primitive, Noi, or Ci of the Dative or Accusative Cases, in English, to us, or else us; except it be with verbs of privation, with which it becometh of the Ablative case; as for example, vedéndone giocáre lúi ne diéde denári, seeing us all play, he gave us money, Incontrándone lu' lui ne diéde il buón giórno, meeting us, he gave us the good-morrow; lúi ne hà tólto il nóſtro ripóſo, e rubítone i nóſtri denári, he hath taken our reſt from us, and ſtole our money from us.

Ne, I find to have been once (by a good Author) uſed in a ſixth ſenſe, in liew of the Latine vel, in Engliſh, or elſe; ſe gli ócchi miéi ti fúr dólci ne cári, if mine eyes have been fair to thee, or elſe dear.
